Imagine a backyard where chickens roam freely, their cheerful clucks filling the air. As they scratch and peck in the soil, they aerate it, improving its fertility. Their droppings provide natural fertilizer, nourishing your plants and reducing the need for synthetic chemicals. In return, the chickens benefit from a pest-free environment, as they love to gobble up insects and slugs that can damage plants.

In short, gardening with free range chickens is a win-win situation. Not only do you get fresh eggs and delicious homegrown produce, but you also create a sustainable and vibrant ecosystem in your backyard.
