The Story

John Henry was a steel-driving man, known for his strength and determination. He worked on the Big Bend Tunnel in West Virginia, and his job was to drill holes in the rock for blasting. John Henry was the best steel-driver on the crew, and he could drill more holes than any other man.

One day, a steam drill was brought to the tunnel. The steam drill was much faster than John Henry, and it seemed that it would soon put him out of a job. John Henry was determined not to be replaced by a machine, so he challenged the steam drill to a race.

The race began, and John Henry drilled with all his might. The steam drill was faster, but John Henry was stronger. The two machines drilled side by side, and the race was close. In the end, John Henry won the race, but he died of exhaustion shortly after.
