Born in Vienna in 1922, Marianne Gracie's childhood was one of happiness and privilege. However, the rise of Nazi Germany cast a dark shadow over her family's life. In 1938, her father was arrested and sent to Dachau concentration camp. Marianne and her mother fled to the Netherlands, hoping to find refuge.

But their sanctuary proved to be short-lived. In 1940, the Nazis invaded Holland. Marianne and her mother were forced into hiding, living in constant fear of discovery. They endured unimaginable hardships, including hunger, cold, and the ever-present threat of betrayal.

Despite the horrors she endured, Marianne never lost her hope. She used her artistic talent to create beautiful butterflies, which served as a symbol of her resilience and the hope for a brighter future. The butterflies not only brought her solace but also became a source of inspiration for others.

In 1943, Marianne and her mother were discovered by the Nazis and sent to Auschwitz-Birkenau. There, they faced unimaginable suffering and cruelty. Marianne witnessed countless horrors, but she clung to her hope, her butterfly becoming a symbol of her unwavering determination to survive.

Miraculously, Marianne and her mother survived the horrors of the Holocaust. After liberation, Marianne dedicated her life to sharing her story and inspiring others. She became an advocate for peace and reconciliation and traveled the world, speaking about the importance of hope and forgiveness.

'The Jewish Butterfly' is not just a story of survival; it is a celebration of the human spirit. It is a testament to the power of hope, resilience, and the indomitable nature of the human heart. Marianne Gracie's legacy lives on, inspiring generations to come.
